IX.

The second machine to which I invite attention is a horizontal brickmaker, shown by Mr. C. Schliekseyen, of Berlin. The process of brickmaking by this machine may be roughly described as follows. The clay is first thrown into a hopper, which feeds it between two heavy rollers in order to pulverize it and to crush any stones which it might contain. The pulverized clay passes from the rolling mill on to a broad belt, or elevator, which carries it into the hopper of the machine, through which it falls into the cylinder. A screw which revolves in the cylinder mixes the clay, while at the same time it pushes it forward to the mouth of the cylinder where the die or mould is placed. Over this mould there is a small box of water, small pipes from which moisten the clay to the consistency required. This die is movable, and a mould of any shape may be fixed at the point of discharge, so that the same machine will work equally well in making corncrises, hollow or solid bricks, or blocks of whatever shape may be desired. The bar of clay, propelled from the cylinder by the revolution of the screw, is carried over a platform of rollers, and a boy working a lever, to which are attached steel wires, cuts off the bricks two at a time. Different sizes of the machine are made, and the price varies accordingly. The bricks made by this machine would take more time to dry than those made by Durand and Marais' process in which no water is used. The machine works perfectly, and there appears to be no likelihood of its ever getting out of order. With No. 3 machine (the largest size shown at the Exhibition), 20,000 bricks may be made in a day. The price of the machine and roller-mill would be about £250 shipped at London; and that of No. 2 size, having a manufacturing capacity of 12,000 bricks a day, would be about £150, also inclusive of the rolling machine. Mr. Schliekseyen likewise shows a vertical drain-pipe manufacturing machine on a similar principle by ments of which 1000 feet of stand 8-inch drain-pipes can be made in a day, or double that quantity of pipe will be the range. He also exhibits a very ingenious machine worked by hand for subjecting to additional pressure bricks which may be required for facing or other purposes.

The third firm which exhibits brickmaking machinery is that of Messrs. Chambers, Brother, and Co., of Philadelphia. They do not exhibit a full size machine, but the model perfect in all its parts, and which, run by steam-power, illustrates all the details of their method of brickmaking. The bricks actually made are very diminutive in size, but there is no reason on that account to distrust the efficacy of the machine, some fifty of which are, I am told, now used in the United States. The process of manufacture is similar in many respects to that last described, but there are some important differences. The tempering portion of the machine consists of a strong iron case, in which revolves a horizontal shaft, into which are set spirally strong tempering knives, or steel blades, and these cut up the clay and move it forward to the small end of the shaft. On the end of the shaft is a conical screw is secured, which revolves in cast-iron case, the inside of which is ribbed so as to prevent the clay from revolving in it and is chilled to prevent wearing. The revolving screw delivers the clay to the forming die, whose breadth and thickness correspond to the size of the brick to be produced. The bar of clay which emerges from this die is perfectly rectangular, and it is carried forward to the cutters along an endless belt, supported on rollers. The cutters consist of thin blades of steel, secured by the periphery of a wheel, they are guided by the plates so arranged that they come in contact with the clay while the knives are passing through it, and so as to support the under side and edge of the bar while it is being cut. The bricks are cleanly cut from the continuous bar, and they are carried forward on another endless belt through a chamber where a continuous cloud of fine dust or sand is blown upon them. Particles of dust adhere to the moist surfaces of the bricks, and they are thus more easily manipulated. This process makes no provision for crushing the stones; but should a stone get into the tempering portion of the machine too large to pass through the die there is a safety valve which opens automatically and through which the stone can be easily removed without injury to the machine or delay to the working. The cutters are so delicately adjusted also that, should they come into contact with a small stone embedded in the band of clay, they at once recoil, the contact being so slight as not to injure the blade. In connection with their machines, Chambers and Co. construct dryers to render the manufacture independent of the weather. These dryers consist of six or eight brick flues, through which rails may be laid from the machines, and they provide them with firebricks and doors at the lower end and stack at the upper. The iron doors of the flues slide in iron grooves counterpoised by a weight at each end, so that they can be readily opened and closed. The flues are about forty feet long, three and a half feet wide at the bottom, two and a half at the top, and four feet high. The manufacturing capacity of the machines is said to be from 25,000 to 35,000 every ten hours, and the time required to dry the bricks in the flues from eight to twelve hours. In Chambers's brickmaking establishment the bricks are removed from the machine on "cars," or small waggon, by which a boy can transport between 400 and 500 bricks with greater ease than a man can wheel half a hundred in a barrow. The load is run into one of the flues, where a current of heated air is forced through the bricks, the steam from the bricks near the fire condensing on the cold surface of the cars, preventing choking or cracking. At the bottom of the flues are doors, and the bricks are wheeled out, and until they are run into the kilns, double handling and wheeling is avoided, and the bricks are less liable to get out of shape. The cost of the largest machine is about $280. By Chambers's process bricks can be made in all weathers, and the cost of the bricks in the sheds is put down at less than 6c. a thousand, exclusive of cost of clay, interest on capital, and wear upon machinery. There are hundreds of miles of bricked pavements in the streets of Philadelphia, and nearly all the houses are built exclusively of brick above the foundations. Paint or cement is never used, and it may therefore be assumed that the quality of the clay and the make of the bricks are superior.

None of the processes described above are new, or each exhibitor has been awarded distinctions of one sort or other in former years. I have not the slightest doubt about the effectiveness of the Berlin machine; and while Chambers only exhibits a working model, still the small scale the model does so perfectly on a small scale is considered to be highly satisfactory by those who have used the machine in large works.

ALBURY.

FROM OUR CORRESPONDENT.

THANK GOD, the rain has come at last in seeking and gentle shower, and the crops are saved from a remarkably well considering the depressing effect of the drought. On the last day of the month the Albury Society held its usual weekly gathering, and the presence of which appears in our local papers. The principal item of the only "ribble on the occasion" will consist of a reading of the report of the Albury Association, to be considered this evening, seeing that the rural population has increased immensely during the last few years. If this be the case, it should represent the productions of the district in the same proportion that the Albury Association will be best introduced the manufacturers—the wines and fruits, and jams, and other articles too numerous to detail.

The Federal city should certainly set an example worthy of notice. The agent of a certain well-invested enterprise, Mr. Madison Hurd, has the apostrophe of "brother" on his mind. The Rev. Mr. Evans, who is the principal of the Voice of Liberty is leaving for Tasmania with a view to settlement in that country. It appears that he had received an invitation to settle at Uran, but as the principal station in that quarter are Presbyterians, the reverend gentleman has determined to go to the colony named in preference. Mr. Madison Hurd, the apostrophe of temperance and social improvement, is holding a series of meetings, which seek the spread of total abstinence on the one hand, and the success of Wesleyan Methodism on the other, and it is to be hoped that the cause of temperance and domestic good will be done. The Roman Catholics opened their new church at Wedmore some time back while the Rev. Mr. Evans was in the city, and the church is a handsome building, and it was only partly completed. However, the church on the coast was crowded, and the Rev. Mr. Evans will undoubtedly. There will, probably be another opening, and the cause here the funds are raised, so difficult is it to raise the wind.

The Rev. J. M. Ward, of Denham, has resigned his office as a member of the Albury Association, on account of the inability of the people to raise his stipend. The arrears are stated to be £100.

The Albury department is very dull, sailors have come (and departed), and quite a number of articles have accumulated to their late; yet new boats are licensed, and a very handsome one is in course of erection in the centre of the town. The Albury Association is in the hands of the Rev. Mr. Evans, who is the principal of the Voice of Liberty and Co. has terminated, and Le's in employ by the company to drive the Denham train.

The Rev. Mr. Evans is the principal of the temple of the Christians in the matter of building churches, he has promised to apply to the Government for a charter, and he has received in honor of Confucius or some less illustrious god, a medal.

[illegible][illegible][illegible][illegible]

verbal analysis of the characters of her leading personages as conceived in her own mind, instead of leaving those characters to develop themselves naturally, and as it were, spontaneously by speech and action. As a story, however, "Daniel Deronda" is far superior in interest to "Middlemarch." The author, as an Englishman, is said to be engaged on a new serial for the Convivial, on terms which recognize her high place among living writers of fiction.

France and England have each lost a distinguished female writer during the past month. No doubt the career of Madame Dudevant was like her genius, far more striking than that of Miss Martineau, yet how infinitely more useful was the latter in her generation. And I think that, as an Englishman, without satisfaction, the contrast between the stilted declamation which glorified the obsequies of "George Sand," as though womanhood were exalted by overlooking its proper boundaries, with the modest funeral of our English authoress and the temperate eulogies of the Press on her course of useful labour. None of the obituaries I have seen has noticed that charming little tale "Feats on the Flood," but I would advise anyone who wishes to appreciate the beauty of the Martineau type of character and style to read it carefully, no matter if for the second time. It will charm when her illustrations of political economy are forgotten.

A few last words on grave affairs. The French Republic is going to the wall. No doubt the Republic is a great step forward, but it is a step forward to a more violent Republic. Still there appears a lack of power to recognize what to an English view are the primary principles of Constitutional Government. The outcry of the whole Republic is that the Republic is a failure. M. Buffet into the Senate showed an unwholesome desire for the suppression of minorities. On the other hand, the hint given by Marshal MacMahon that the present Ministry has as strong a favour of the "Left" as his palace will tolerate, in fact that he will not have a Gambetta administration—seems to imply a lack of respect for a Parliamentary majority. However, the Republic cannot be forced to succumb, but France needs time for her present experiment; meanwhile, it is pleasant to see that the time of the French Press grows more friendly towards this country, as that of the Russian journals grows more spiteful.

Another fortnight will show the legislative results of the session. That many measures will have to be dropped is no doubt, but I think the Education Bill and the Prisoners Act are safe. But it is sad in French a press of business to see a whole day wasted in the mere sifting of other rotten proposals. The Home Rule resolutions cost a day, but it was not quite wasted, as the spirit of Home Rule was utterly rebuffed, before the franker madness of repeal and the Home Rule really enjoyed the declaration from Mr. St. John's that the Home Rule style of Irish oratory. But, however, means to try for another half-day on the amnesty question. No wonder important business gets into arrears.

July 7.—The general state of the country is healthy. The decrease of pauperism continues; wheat is a fair briar, though trade is dull, and the agricultural reports are generally favourable. The Southern hay-crop has been light, but in good condition; that in the North promises to be both heavy and well-served. The weather is generally fine, except the wall-frost. London has been for some time very dull in the matter of private entertainments, a large portion of the wealthier classes are absent, and the season is glad to say there is no falling off in the receipts of the great theatres. I wish I could conclude by something definitely hopeful on the Eastern questions; but the facts are as hard to get as they are difficult to reason on. To the chance of our war is it struck from the map, or is it a mere stock-jobbing affair—or, in plain words, lying with a view to robbery. But, as far as I can believe anything, I believe that the Turks have advanced at starting a market, though not decisive advantage over their Serbian assailants. I am by no means sure that the best thing for Serbia would be a thorough drubbing—which she would assuredly get, but for the underhand way in which the Turks would be taken by the Great Powers that she should obtain good terms, while the fallen prestige of Turkey would be partly restored. But if Serbia should conquer she would not conquer for herself, and a long struggle with her would be a long struggle with the Russian Empire. As it is, the large proportion of the "Christian" subjects of the Porte are little better than brigands. I cannot waste good sympathy on either party in the struggle, but only continue to hope that the cause may be localised in the revolted provinces, and Russian rapacity baffled. And in spite of some ugly symptoms, I believe we shall escape a general European war. As for Turkish reform, when it has been carried out in the formal administration of the country—when religious life is a fact, and the revenue collected without extortion and spent without corruption and profligate extravagance—it will be time to talk of that still stranger novelty—Constitutional Government.

KINGSBOROUGH FOR SALE.

GEORGE KISS has received instructions from George Len. Esq., to sell by auction, at the Bazaar, on MONDAY, September 4th (the Monday after the Derby), the celebrated Racetrack KINGSBOROUGH.

He is by imported Kingston from England's Beauty (dam of the late).

KINGSBOROUGH has been one of the best performers ever raced in Australia.

At two years old he won the Champagne Stakes and St. George's Stakes, at Randwick; and the great Two-Year-Old Stakes of the A.C.C.

At three years old he ran eight times, winning seven, including the Hawkesbury Guineas and Produce Stakes; the A.C.C. Derby, the Melbourne Cup, the Sydney Cup, the Randwick Handicap and Northern J.C. Cup, at Randwick, carrying 8 st. 6 lbs.; the only time he was beaten that season being for the All-Aged Stakes at Randwick, where he ran round by himself before starting.

At four years old he won a four weight for age race, beating all the best horses of the season, including Goldsmith, Cygnet, and others; and ran five seconds, among which were—second to Goldsmith for the Metropolitan Stakes, carrying 8 st. 10 lbs.; second to Richmond for the Randwick Plate; second to St. George's Cup for the Flying Stakes at Melbourne; second to A.T. for the Sydney Cup, in which he carried 7 st. 2 lbs.; and second to Brierley for the All-Aged Stakes next day.

These things make him the best performer in the colonies. Kingsborough is still sound and fit to race; but, having been a little sore, it has been determined for the present to put him out of training and submit him for sale.
